Item 2

Protection of Archaeological and Paleontological Remains and Materials: The contractor shall be alert to the possibility that, during the prosecution of the Project, significant archaeological or paleontological remains or other such materials may be uncovered. Such remains are in many cases protected by State and/or Federal laws. Archaeological resources are minimally defined by Federal regulations as material remains of 50 to 100 years of age or older. They typically consist of subsurface concentrations of metal, bone, ceramic, and/or flaked or otherwise shaped stone artifacts. They might also consist of features such as buried building foundations, linear or circular walls made of individual stones rather than concrete or cement, trash-filled pits, patches of burned earth, and/or distinct patterns of neatly circular, elliptical, or squared discolorations in newly exposed soil accompanied by the types of artifacts described above. Paleontological resources are defined as any fossilized remains, traces, or imprints of organisms, preserved in or on the earth's crust. These typically include fossilized bones, teeth, shells, or eggs, or distinct impressions made in bedrock.

When archaeological or paleontological materials are inadvertently encountered, the Contractor shall immediately halt operations in the location of same and shall notify the Engineer of said discovery. The contractor shall make every effort to preserve archaeological or paleontological materials intact in the original positions, in order to preserve the geological context and information content of the remains in relation to one another and to the enclosing soil.

The Engineer shall have the authority to suspend Project work in the area of such discovery for the purpose of preserving, documenting, and recovering the archaeological or paleontological materials.

The Contractor shall carry out all instructions of the Engineer for the protection of such materials, including steps to protect the site from vandalism and unauthorized investigation, from accidental damage, and from dangers such as heavy rainfall or runoff. The Contractor shall reschedule its work to minimize any loss of the time needed to complete the Project while the State evaluates, records, and salvages the archaeological or paleontological materials.
